

PRIZES

Amanda Charles (L) & Merrin Adams with their Student Prize Awards

Mick Warne presenting the prizes

Merrin
Adams

Amanda Charles

David Leece - hail the conquering hero

Three-times
Lucky Julli

- Munro Mortimer for his striling job as Treasurer, and for staying on in that position because no-one else here dared to...not to mention the honorarium.
- David Leece for receiving the Public Service Medal for services yet unknown. David was instrumnetal in establishing the ASE and has been a strong advocate since.

The Lame Duck Awards for EnviroTox 2001 went to:

- Gary Fan for being the Proof Reader Extrordinaire and of North American origin. Unfortunately, he missed Lake Heron in the draft program – it should of course, should have been Lake Huron.
- John Chapman for not recognising the difference between “public” and “pubic”.
- Thomas Steeger for needing to be told which direction to look in the sky for the Southern Cross...and for pinch hitting at short notice.

- Moreno Julli – the man who should always travel with three back-up disks...now known as “Three-times Lucky Julli”. Also known as...sorry, what was the question Moreno?
  - Rainer Mann for bagging American coffee, then considering, we believe, a position in North America.
  - Nico van Straalen, our invited speaker, for the “quiet-as-a-mouse” award, which changed after he gave his talk.
    - Doug Holdway got the “not-so-quiet-as-a-mouse” award, which didn’t changed after he gave his talk. Doug is now also known as “Death-is-good Holdway”.
    - Scott Wilson for his foot-in-mouth disease – strategically placing WA in the greater Asian region. Scott also received the Best Member Presentation for his shocking the Venetians by talking of their small penis size...of their gastropods, of course.

One special Boobie Prize was made to Louis Tremblay – the prize was made from a zippy pink floppy disk and CD case, donated by an anomous donor who left the floppy disk in the conference lap top’s external zip drive. Louis’ citation was for the flashiest presentation and coping while the data projector was having a fit. (Mick Warne was a close second given all the different ways of saying G’Day!) Louis was also considered for another Boobie Prize – the Seccessional Award. Being from Quebec, Louis it was believed, had been secretly lobbying for the seccession of NZ from Australia...he had not quite realised that NZ was not a State of Australia, so there was (as yet) no need!

The two serious prizes were awarded to joint winners of the Year 2000 Student Award: Merrin Adams and Amanda Charles for their Honours theses. Congratulations!
